The Ottawa Campus

Not long ago students protesting the Vietnam war were considered campus heroes, even by those who disagreed with them, because they had a moral cause they were willing to stand up for. How times have changed; students at Ottawa who protested the immorality of the Second City performance are ridiculed by CAMPUS artists Roehl and Foltz simply because they were willing to let their convictions be known.

Some time ago a similar situation arose concerning the open dorm question. Anyone opposing unlimited visitation was termed a nasty puritan. At the time I wrote asking that those objecting to current policies give what they felt was a better Christian standard of morality (including, of course, why it should be clearly called Christian.) Predictably, I got no serious reply. If one has no professed moral standards he is safely immune from ever being called a hypocrite. Not that Christians are or should be immune from the charge of hypocrisy; the higher the standard one professes the more vulnerable he makes himself by his very profession. Yet Roehl and Foltz never give any evidence for the charge of hypocrisy. It was a cheap shot. When they have something that is clearly a better, more positive morality for a Christian school, we all want to know what it is.
