

Dr. Floyd Urges Students to Crib

Dr. Floyd's Organic Chemistry class recently spent a recitation hour on the merits and possibilities of "cribbing" by students of Ottawa, led by their noble professor. Dr. Floyd believes that a student is entitled to cheat or "crib" if he can get away with it. "The professor who is too dumb," says Dr. Floyd, "to find the student who is cheating has no business teaching school."

Dr. Floyd believes also that teachers can make enough on the side selling passing grades to students to keep a family alive during the periods that Al Stout spends all the school salary fund on trips to Kansas City with Florence Hegberg.

As a tip to the wise student Dr. Floyd told of several new devices for making cribbing easier for the student and harder for the teacher. He does not believe in letting the teachers off easy, but says that they should be made to earn their pay. He told of the new patented cuff that reveals the writing on it by blowing one's breath on the other. And of the system of signals employed by the two master artists, Fred Koehler and Ace Eagles whereby by the proper wigwagging and hand manipulation each conveys to the other all the history he knows, so by combined intellect both can pass in Dr. Fogdall's classes. If Dr. Floyd keeps his theories of cheating he will probably find his Organic Chemistry class next semester filled to overflowing.
