their authenticity and limited run;

the maximum fidelity in reproduction is obtained through chromatic separations achieved with luminous spectra which are capable of recreating the "color-temperature" of the solar light, and therefore, of reproducing the colors as they were conceived and painted by the artist. Skilled technicians use these ultra modern technical processes and exacting controls to verify the graphic results through comparison with the original work of art;

the perfection of litho-off-set printing, developed through long experience, the application of sophisticated techniques, and the use of specially prepared inks and materials (satin, canvases, wood, paper) selected so that they help to recreate, in the reproductions, the actual physical characteristics of the original work.
