FOREWORD

This supplement to the catalogue for 1944-1945 has been issued this year instead of printing a new catalogue. In other years the annual catalogue of Ottawa University has been published in the spring, serving as a record of the academic year which was coming to a close and as an announcement of the following academic year.

Because of war conditions it was thought advisable to use the 1944-1945 catalogue and to issue a supplement. In this supplement are found descriptions of new courses and a statement of the revised tuition and living expenses. For descriptions of other courses, general information about Ottawa University, the faculty and administrative officers, see the Catalogue for 1944-1945.

Division of Religion, Philosophy and Theology

101-102. INTRODUCTION TO RELIGION, PHILOSOPHY, AND THEOLOGY. This survey-sample course is the prerequisite for all other courses in this division other than 201-202. Its aims are (1) to acquaint the beginner with the religious, philosophical, and theological areas of human concern; (2) to distinguish these three fields from other dimensions of human experience and knowledge and from each other; and to show correlations between these fields within the division, and between the division and other divisions; (3) to introduce the student to the approaches and methods of these fields in relation to those of fields in other divisions; (4) to consider the main disciplines, branches, and types of religious and philosophical thought; (5) to familiarize the student with the central elements of the Hebrew-Jewish-Christian tradition, with special attention to the contents and significance of the Bible and nature of the Christian experience of God, and the Christian task in the modern world.

Three hours, through the year.

201. OLD TESTAMENT AND INTERTESTAMENTAL LITERATURE.

202. NEW TESTAMENT LITERATURE. The method of this course is both survey and sample. Its aim is to familiarize the student with the contents of the Bible, but also to train him in an interpretive procedure which recognizes the distinctions between form and meaning and between critical and symbolic historiography. The constant effort, on the basis of a critical reconstruction of Hebrew-Israelite-Jewish-Christian history, is to permit an interillumination of life and literature.

Three hours, each semester.

305. CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP. While this course places Christian leadership in its larger contexts and scrutinizes the leadership function in the light of the Hebrew-Christian heritage, its aim is practical and even denominational. The broad principles of leadership and the perspective of leadership in other Christian groups are not neglected, but primary stress is placed upon leadership in local Baptist churches and in the larger Baptist fellowship. The effect on leadership of the trend toward co-operation among Christian groups, especially as this trend appears in the ecumenical movement, is also considered.

First semester. Three hours.

306. SOCIAL INFLUENCE OF CHRISTIANITY. This course investigates the Christian roots of Western culture and civilization and the rootage of Christian faith and its effects among non-Western peoples at the present time. Preliminary to this study is a survey of the nature and structure of religious groups (sociology of religion.) Attention is called to the present vitality of Christian life throughout the world and the prospect of the Christian faith's increasing influence, economic, social, and political. The rise and importance of the so-called social gospel is related to current movements in Christian thought and to parallel cultural movements outside the Christian faith.

Second semester. Three hours. Prerequisite: Sociology 201-202. Credit in either Religion or Sociology.

307. ANCIENT AND MEDIEVAL CLASSIC CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

308. REFORMATION AND MODERN CLASSIC CHRISTIAN LITERATURE. This course affords first-hand contact with the creative intellectual and devotional literature in the development of Christian life and thought. Its assumption is that no adequate substitute for this direct communion of saints exists, and its conviction is that there is no comparable means for the development of spiritual depth and perspective.

Three hours, each semester.

401. CLASSIC PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE. This course affords first-hand contact with the creative literature in the development of the Western mind. The lectures provide the historical background for, and interpret the significance of, the selected texts.

First semester. Three hours.

404. ETHICS. This is a survey of theories of the beautiful and the good in the light of modern value problems. To the extent that the idea of truth underlies these two concepts, the course deals also with metaphysics. Stress is put on comparisons and contrasts between philosophical and Christian ethics. Problems of Christian conduct, ancient and modern, are analyzed and relation to the Christian principles of righteousness and love.

Second semester. Three hours.

Education

104. GEOGRAPHY. Three hours.

112. CHILDREN'S LITERATURE. Two hours.
