

Seventy-five years of dreams, ambitions, and worthy desires! Some of them have been realized. Some are still to be accomplished. Our thoughts turn to the past; to the leaders who have made the institution great in its contribution to society; to the students who have gone out to play a prominent part in the world's work; to events and achievements of which we are proud and to which memory turns with ever increasing pleasure. It is well to remember, however, that Ottawa has reached a critical age in her history. It is easy, at such a time in life, to fall into the habit of living in the past and of being self-complacent. The past is a good servant but a dangerous master. It is important to evaluate our achievements and to prepare for greater ones in the future. There is much to be done and this is a critical and exacting time in which we live. Let us carry on this important task so nobly begun and with the cooperation and loyal support of all make it worthy of its heritage.—Andrew B. Martin.
