

HE: What are you looking at?

SHE: Nothing in particular.

HE: Then why so concentrated an expression? You must be looking at something in particular!

SHE: No I'm not. I'm just seeing.

HE: Come, now! How can you be seeing if you aren't looking at anything in particular?

SHE: What are you talking about? I can see better when I'm not looking at anything!

HE (shaking his head): Women! A man would never talk such nonsense!

SHE (smiling): On that I agree with you. Men only look. They don't see.

HE: I feel uncomfortable, and worried. We just decided to live together and we're fighting already! What kind of relationship is it going to be if you think I only look and I know you don't either look or see but claim to see?

SHE: It can't be much of a relationship if you claim to know about what you claim I only think I know about.

(SILENCE)

SHE: It might just work out all right.

HE: What?

SHE: Our relationship.

HE: Why?

SHE: Because you seem to know when not to speak.
