Dear Veatch,

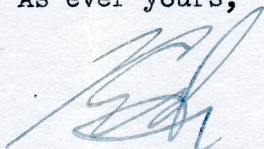

Thanks for your letter of February 16th. Ever since it arrived I have been trying to remember the subject of that extempore effort, and am unable to do so. It must have been very bad. I have filled out the Pi Kappa Delta form and am returning it herewith. I am grateful for your thoughtfulness in this matter.

It seems a long time since my work has provided any opportunity for practice in extempore speaking. For almost five years now, censorship regulations have required that everything be scripted in advance, but perhaps when the war is over I can again demonstrate my ability to split infinitives with the best of them.

Please give my regards to anyone in your Department who may happen to remember me.

I hope that some day when all this is past, we shall come back and spend some time at Pullman.

As ever yours,

Dear Professor Veatch,

Many thanks for sending me the Pi Kappa Delta membership card. The key has not yet arrived; when it does I suppose it will remind me of the bad job I did for you during that extempore contest.

I am a little weary of broadcasting but had 12 hours in France last week and that helped. London seems almost remote from the war in spite of the doodle bugs that visit us occasionally.

As ever yours
