Lucky Coach. About 3:30 Monday afternoon Coach Harold Schory found himself locked in his room on the third floor of the Alpha Xi house. He had shut the door and the latch had caught. Efforts to unlock the door were to no avail. Workmen could not get it off its hinges. Schory got out of his afternoon judging assignment. He says that the report that he locked the door intentionally is a base slander. At seven o'clock the frustrated workmen went for a sledge to break the door. This plan is too costly for other coaches to try.

Unlucky Coach. When Tom Houston, Oklahoma Theta at Southeastern State, reached Bowling Green, he was also assigned a room in the Alpha Xi house, on the first floor, sharing it with another coach who shall be nameless here. Enough to say that he is from Kansas, wears a pointed beard, and is a former national president. At a circumspect hour both went peacefully to sleep. In a few minutes the unfortunate Houston was awakened by terrific snores. He tossed, he put the pillow over his head, but he could not get back to sleep while the Kansan was sawing wood. He finally rolled him over off his back and woke him up. But as soon as Tom got back to sleep, the portly Kansan rolled back into the proper position, and started again on some particularly tough logs. This kept up all night. In the morning both asked for different room assignments, the Kansan because he objected to being awoken so often, and the Oklahoman to get a place where he could sleep. Tom was assigned a room on the second floor with a good natured coach from Louisiana. But alas! As soon as he got to sleep, the Southern coach opened up with sleep disturbing snores. Houston finally moved into an unoccupied room across the hall. He refuses to trust another coach.

Two blind students are participating in the tournament. Richard Schrempf, Augustana, Illinois Xi, is in the discussion contest. Earlier he was a member of the team which won the men's debate championship at the Northwest tournament. Gene Cole, Tennessee Epsilon, Carson-Newman, is a debater.

After twenty-two years at East Texas State Teachers, Maud Webster transferred her activities to the damn Yankees in Whitewater, Wisconsin Epsilon. She is here with another well trained delegation.

As Roy Murphy, Southwestern Louisiana Institute, left the Falcon's Nest rubbing his agreeably distended stomach after an ample meal, he encountered a stranger who asked him how he was being treated on the Bowling Green campus. "Very well, indeed," the coach replied.

The stranger identified himself as President Frank J. Prout. "I have been in Columbus all day to see what the legislature is doing with our appropriations. I rushed back to be sure that everything possible was being done for our guests of Pi Kappa Delta."

"If the legislature treats you as generously as you have us, you're going to have to expand too," Mr. Murphy assured him.

DON'T FORGET THE IMPORTANT BUSINESS MEETING AT SEVEN O'CLOCK TUESDAY EVENING. It will be in the college auditorium. The new national president and vice-president will be elected at that meeting.

Roy Mahaffey and his Linfield, Oregon alpha, debaters are the long distance champions. From Oregon they went to Los Angeles, El Paso, with a side trip into Mexico, New Orleans, Baton Rouge, spent a week in New York city, four days in Washington, D. C., took in the Grand National tournament at Fredericksburg, Virginia, and will spend a day in Chicago on their way home from Bowling Green. All in all, they will be gone a trifle over four weeks and will travel over 9,000 miles. They had already participated in seventeen debates before they got here.
